PRESS RELEASE

22 September 2008

MONEY TO REOPEN THE PORTISHEAD LINE IS THERE FOR THE ASKING

Local rail campaigners are pushing for a share of Government funding to be spent on rail projects, including reopening the Portishead line. Local authorities in the South West will shortly be bidding for money under the Regional Funding Allocation, and Railfuture Severnside would like to see Bristol's suburban rail network get a share.

"This money could transform the rail system in the Bristol area, raising it to the standard of those in other major cities in the UK" said Branch Secretary Nigel Bray.

"Portishead has grown massively since its station closed in 1964, when the roads were less congested and there was little concern about the effects of traffic growth on the environment".

Reopening of the Portishead branch and the Henbury line to passenger trains could become a reality if the South West Regional Assembly agrees to bid for funds under the RFA 2 programme.

New stations and a restored passenger service over the Henbury line would enable people to reach Airbus and Cribbs Causeway by train, providing a fast alternative to car travel.

Rail travel in the UK reached a record level of 49 billion passenger kilometres in 2007/08* and Railfuture points out that in South Wales the recently reopened Ebbw Vale line is carrying double the number of passengers which had been forecast. "There is every reason to believe that the Portishead and Henbury lines would be well supported." said Nigel.
