

This major new book, Disconnected! Broken Links in Britain's Rail Policy by Chris Austin and Richard Faulkner considers the social and economic impact of "Beeching" rail closures of the 1960s and beyond and how, in the light of subsequent passenger demand and line reopenings, the original decisions now appear seriously flawed. Those closures left a lot of gaps in Britain's railway network and a legacy of inadequate capacity. The book considers which lines Beeching and his successor should have kept, and what lessons we can learn from the closures today. This book follows the authors' successful 2012 publication entitled Holding the Line, which has been Railfuture's largest selling third-party book. Railfuture is able to offer this hardcover book at just £20 (including post and packing), which is £5 off the recommended retail price of £25. In addition, the profit on your purchase will contribute to Railfuture's campaigning.

How The Railway Works is an ideal present for someone interested in the railway and who wants to know more about how Britain's uniquely fragmented railway works, in an easy-to-read book written by Dan Harvey.

It covers a wide range of topics such as the franchising system, the role of the different train operators, passenger and freight, other operators on the network, who owns the railway infrastructure and how that is managed, the role of the Government, Network Rail and statutory organisations, regional bodies involved in the railways, the rolling stock leasing companies, and what happens in the event of an accident. Railfuture is able to offer this hard cover book at just £16, £4 off the recommended price of £20. Price includes post and packing.

The Regional Railways Story By Gordon Pettitt and Nicholas Comfort was published in September 2015, and describes three decades of revival in the fortunes of regional rail services during sectorisation and the 20 years of privatisation. Railfuture is able to offer this hardback book at £22, an £8 discount on the recommended price. Price includes post and packing. Every purchase will also support our campaigning.
